QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

(Editor's note: Here are the questions asked most frequently by Virginia farmers during the past week, as reported by county agents. Staff members of the VPI Agricultural Extension Service and/or Experiment Station supply the answers.)

Q.- Can alfalfa still be grazed without harm?

A. Yes, if you don't graze it down to less than 6 or 8 inches. Some protection must be left on the ground.

Q. What small grain can I seed now to harvest for feed late next spring?

A. It is past the recommended date for fall seedings of small grain, and any seeded now will be a gamble. Better wait until February when you can seed winter oats.

Q. What variety of tobacco should I plant on blackshank infested soil?

A. There are several disease-resistant varieties available. A list with this year's suggestions based on latest research will be prepared for distribution next month, and will include varieties and conditions under which they should be used. County agents will be furnished copies of the list and the information will be released.

Q. Will it pay to feed home-grown grains to my livestock?

A. Generally, yes.

Q. Which grades of burley tobacco will get the most increase in government support prices?

A. Consult the price support cards at your tobacco warehouse for the currently available information.

LUNENBURG FARMER HAS THE 'KNOW-HOW'

Blacksburg, Dec. 4.- J. S. (Billy) Gee, Kenbridge, Va., a Lunenburg County dairyman, is making good use of his winter pastures, according to H. B. Powers, county agent.

Mr. Gee's herd of 35 cows is producing about 10,000 pounds of milk and 400 pounds of butterfat, according to D. H. I. A. test, and he attributes this in part to making wise use of winter pastures.

This dairyman has seeded winter pastures for the past five to six years. In 1957 he has about 40 acres sown to three different mixtures in three different fields: (1) 4 bushels of oats and 15 to 20 pounds of crimson clover, (2) 2 bushels of rye and 15 to 20 pounds of crimson clover, and (3) 2 bushels of rye and 15 to 20 pounds of rye grass.

He uses these mixtures following silage corn, small grain with lespedeza and flue tobacco. Mr. Gee keeps the soil pH around 6.2 to 6.6 (except the tobacco land) with proper amounts of lime. He prepares a good seedbed free of clods and applies from 400 to 600 pounds of a 5-10-10 fertilizer, working this into the soil, just before seeding. He usually seeds one of the mixtures around August 15 to 20. In the fall Mr. Gee boosts this growth by applying 30 pounds of nitrogen per acre.

The 40 acres are divided into four fields which are grazed rotationally. On the average these cows get their fill by grazing three and one-half hours per day. By handling the grazing in this manner, Mr. Gee can get an average of about 120 to 140 days of grazing. Cows are not allowed on these fields during rainy days to avoid miring. The after growth in the late spring, after permanent pastures are lush, is used for silage or hay.

Mr. Gee figures winter pastures boost milk production by at least 20 per cent. He says, "I am completely sold on winter pastures and think that it is a must for dairymen if they are to have a well rounded forage program."
